From the above, it is obvious that phonology is not phonetics, neither is phonetics phonology. They are however both subject to descriptive details if proper instrument of analysis is applied. The question then is: what is the difference? From the definitions above, the difference should be somewhat obvious. We have said that phonetics describes the physical realisation of sounds.

phonology But this doesn't necessarily mean that the focus of thought is natural language representations (words, syntax, phonology). From the Cambridge English Corpus While failure to detect liaison consonants may seem attributable to higher-level factors, partial evidence was found for both autosegmental and exemplar-based models of phonology.

The present study has focused on acoustic phonetics correlates of pitch, but a future phonological analysis might explore the underlying phonology. From the Cambridge English Corpus Obviously, though, syntax involves much more than word order, and language structure concerns, among other things, phonetics, phonology, and morphology as well.
