Farewell, My Lovely by Raymond Chandler - Goodreads

This is Chandler's second novel in a series that uses Philip Marlowe as the main character. The novel is told from Marlowe's point of view, resulting in descriptions that are often exceptionally-detailed and reflect the nuance of the world around him. For example, Marlowe often describes the minutiae of each character he encounters, whether it be the fine details of a person's clothing, their physical features, or the subtlety of their personality coming through in a gesture.
